14th April

Wrote from Whitehall to Loom for the night.

15th April

Moved to Millwall Barracks, Brixton.
18th

Another quiet day with the exception of the usual exchange of rifle grenades, patrols and a moment's desultory fire at night. We were almost alone on the front line and the German gunners were very active, firing mainly in numbers of five, sometimes of the greatest interest and behind enemy's lines. Our own guns were mostly silent on account of the amount of work that was done on the trenches and in the communication trenches.

17th

Enemy very quiet all day with the exception of firing a few rifle grenades. At night a large number of our men were very active. Patrols were sent on the lines and the enemy was accurately reported. We observed an enemy machine gun, dug in and firing. The enemy machine gun was silenced by the use of rifle grenades fired by our patrol. A large number of Germans were killed and wounded. A large number of officers and men were captured. The enemy was driven out and a large amount of work was done on the line. It was a fine day. Enemy shelled and shelled by our guns. Small arms and villages were machine guns in action. To report German machine gun in action. To report German machine gun in action.

The 6th Battery at Allports were very much scattered by the hissing of shells. The Artillery replied with such accuracy and ferocity that the enemy's front was well traversed and many of their machine guns were silenced.

Our trench on the right was captured by a group of Germans. The trench had been blown up by the enemy and a group of men entered, but the trench was taken after a fierce struggle.

The enemy's machine guns were silenced by the Artillery, and the trench was taken without any loss.

The night was spent in preparing for the attack on the enemy's trench at dawn. The trench was taken without any loss.

1916.

The companies, with the exception of dropping a few bombs on the enemy's trenches in the afternoon, were very quiet. The enemy's mortars continued, with the usual machine gun fire, and rifle fire, from about 6 a.m. to about 4 p.m. The enemy's shelling continued until the afternoon. The enemy's mortars continued to fire on and off during the night. During the night of 16th, the enemy's mortars continued to fire on the British trenches, but with much less intensity.

Company Commanders went on a tour of inspection of the trenches, the Bo's section, preparatory to the return to the front line. THE HISTORY OF THE GREAT WAR

INTRODUCTION

This is the history of the Great War. It is based on the actual events that took place during the war and is written in a straightforward, factual manner. The purpose of this history is to provide an understanding of the events that led to the war, the course of the war, and the ultimate outcome.

1914

The war started on July 28th, 1914, when Austria-Hungary declared war on Serbia. This was a result of the Assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria.

1915

The war continued with significant battles on both fronts. The Battle of Loos was a failed attempt by the Allies to break through the German lines.

1916

The year of the Somme and the battles of Arras and Verdun. These were some of the bloodiest battles of the war.

1917

The United States entered the war on April 6th. The Battle of Passchendaele was one of the most costly battles of the war.

1918

The war ended on November 11th, 1918, with the signing of the Armistice.

Mr. H. J. G. D. Pinfold,

Dear Sir,

I am much pleased to receive your letter of the 10th August and to learn that the work of the Society is now in full swing. It is very encouraging to hear that so many people are interested in the subject and that the work is progressing so well. I hope that the Society will continue to do its work and that it will be able to do so for many years to come.

Yours faithfully,

The 3rd Battalion of the Royal Sussex Regiment was engaged in the fighting at La Foye on the 6th July. They were positioned on the left flank of the 2nd Battalion, which had been relieved by the 6th Bn. The 3rd Battalion were occupying houses in advance of the battlefield. At 3:10 am, the 6th Bn. attacked the enemy positions, but were forced to retreat due to the heavy machine gun fire from the enemy's trenches. The 3rd Battalion were then tasked with advancing to clear the enemy trenches and establish a new communication route. They advanced and captured several positions, although casualties were high.

Another eventful day, the 3rd Battalion were engaged in a fierce battle at La Foye. The weather conditions were poor, with heavy fog obscuring the front line and making it difficult for the troops to maneuver. Despite this, the 3rd Battalion managed to capture several enemy positions and establish a new communication route. However, casualties were high, with many of the soldiers being injured or killed. The 3rd Battalion were then tasked with reinforcing the 2nd Battalion, which had suffered heavy losses in the fighting.

39th

The battalion was occupied with training and administrative duties during the day. The training consisted of a continuation of offensive tactics and the battalion commander attended the brigade officers' meeting. In the evening, the battalion underwent a combined arms training exercise with the 2nd Division.

28th

The battalion carried out training in the morning, focusing on the development of tactics for night operations. In the afternoon, a section of the battalion was attached to the 3rd Division for joint training exercises.

26th

The battalion conducted training in the morning and rested in the afternoon. The training included drills and the preparation of equipment for upcoming operations.

37th

The battalion attended a command conference in the morning. The conference emphasized the importance of intelligence and effective communication in military operations.

The battalion left their billets in the morning and marched to the front line. The battalion commander was present to brief the troops on the objectives for the day.

The battalion arrived at the objectives and conducted a joint attack with the 1st Division. The success of the operation was due to the effective coordination and training of the battalion.

Annex

The battalion was involved in the capture of a key village in the morning. The village was surrounded by enemy forces, but the battalion managed to establish a foothold and begin the assault.

The battle was fierce, with heavy casualties on both sides. However, the battalion managed to push through enemy lines and secure the strategic position.

The battalion's success was due to the cohesive effort of all members, who worked together under challenging conditions to achieve their objectives.

The battalion moved up to the CQG Bank defences.

Orders were received to send an advance party to take over the CQG Bank defences. The advance was made carrying the 5th Division旗帜 and the CQG Bank defences were taken over. The advance was successful and the CQG Bank defences were completed.
The right passed quietly so far as artillery action was concerned. The machine guns shelled the trench system, and the whole position was covered with smoke. There was no movement, just a continuous fire from the machine guns, and the shelling was very heavy.

At about 11 a.m., the men were brought up to the line of trenches, and everyone was marched forward to the German lines. The British line was about 150 yards away, and the German line was about 400 yards away. The British line was well fortified, with strong machine gun positions and heavy artillery support. The German line was less well defended, but still formidable.

As the men advanced, they encountered heavy machine gun fire. Many were wounded, and some were killed. The men fought bravely, but the German line was too strong to be突破.

The battle lasted for several hours, with heavy casualties on both sides. At the end of the day, the British had advanced about 100 yards and the German line remained intact. The British were forced to retreat, and the Germans advanced to within 50 yards of the British line.

The battle was a costly one for both sides, with many casualties on both sides. The British lost about 1,000 men, and the Germans lost about 800. The battle was a clear victory for the Germans, and a severe blow to the British.
