

Serjeant Ernest Mitchell

Ernest Mitchell was son of James Mitchell, of 32 Spencer road, Highgate, London; husband of Rosaline Mitchell of 30 Carlton road, Kentish town, London. He was born in 1883 and grew up in number 6 Charlton Kings Road, Kentish Town. His specific birth date is: 2nd February 1883. He married and had three children called Rosaline, Dorothy and Lily-May. He joined up for the first world war when he was 31 years old. He died in 1916, at the age of 33.

Below is a small part of his family tree.

6 CHARLTON KINGS ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, LONDON.

Birthplace of E. Mitchell 2nd February 1883.

photo taken August 1969.

Regiments, Battalions & Battles

Ernest Mitchell started off war life in the second Battalion, The Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment. Very soon after he signed up, Mitchell's Battalion was sent to fight in WW1's first major battle - The battle of Mons. Unlike later trench warfare battles, Mons was a battle of movement. It began on 23rd August 1914. Once the troops arrived in Belgium, they were put under command by Field-Marshal Sir John French. The German cavalry patrols soon encountered the troops and the men started shooting. The British troops were gradually pushed west. They started in front of Mons, positioned in a line along Mons-Condé Canal, in attempt to stop the famous 'Schlieffen' plan. The Germans took victory, claiming the capture of Mons. The Brits lost around 1,600 men.

Once Mitchell's battalion left Belgium, they were split up into different regiments and battalions. Mitchell was sent to join the 11th Battalion, Royal Warwickshire Regiment for the remains of his war experience. Now in the 11th Battalion, Mitchell was taken to France in the August of 1915. Within that month, they were engaged in a minor battle in the Loos Battle. In late June, early July, the 11th Battalion was getting ready to fight in one of the biggest battles of WW1 - The Somme. On the 1st July, 1916, the battle started. It suffered grievous losses, over 20,000 British soldiers died. <sup>On the first day</sup> However, Sergeant Ernest Mitchell was still alive. The Battalion was ordered to leave later that day. Where the Battalion went for 2 days, I do not know, but on 8th July, 1916, they were ordered to re-join the Somme. By noon, they had proceeded to front line. On 9th July, the position was heavily attacked by shell fire, horrible amounts were fired. From the 11th Battalion, 10 men died and 86 were wounded. Sergeant Ernest Mitchell died age 33 on Sunday 9th July 1916, from heavy shell fire. The 11th Battalion continued fighting in the Somme, and were later sent to fight in the second battle of Ypres in October 1917, for Passchendaele Ridge. In November, they went to Northern Italy to assist the Italians in their struggle against German/Austrian troops and won. In October, 1918, the battalion returned to France to fight in the final offensive.

✓ Sgt. E. MITCHELL with unknown Officer in trenches.

Ernest is the man on the left, in the white coat.
paranoid evidence

Weapons

Weapons like guns and cannons played a huge part in the great war. Without them, the war would be totally pointless, very different. Nearly all infantry men used bolt-action rifles. In Germany, the most popular gun was the 'Mauser Gewehr', the most popular in France was 'Lebel'. For the British troops, the Lee-Enfield gun was the most used. It can aim accurately from 600m away but could still kill someone from over 1,400m away. Machine guns were one of the best ways to kill and they did it fast; they had the fire power of 100 bolt-action rifles. As a sergeant Ernest Mitchell would have probably worked one. Tanks were built to withstand war conditions. They were good for shooting and attacking the enemies, however they could not cross trenches. Planes were used for the first time in WWI, they were good for bombing & spying. Fights between two planes were known as 'dogfights'. Gas was a way of killing mass amounts of men. Chlorine gas causes a burning sensation in the throat & chest. Chlorine gas causes painful death - you suffocate. The main gas used was mustard gas. It was fired into trenches in shells. Effects include: vomiting; blistering skin; sore eyes; external and internal bleeding. Death can take up to 5 whole weeks.

good explanation

The Lee-Enfield gun

What was the role of a sergeant?

A sergeant is in command of about 30 men. Sometimes they were in charge of companies. They kept everyone relatively calm and kept control of their platoon.

A map of where Somme is located.

A map of where, in Somme, battles were fought →

Uniform

Because Ernest Mitchell was transferred a little way into the war, he would have worn two slightly different uniforms. The Avonmouth Royal West Surrey regiment would have been equipped with a kit of tan uniform; helmet, belt, jacket, bousers, long socks, heavy duty boots, gun, water bottle and emergency supplies. The same kit would have been given to him in the Royal Warwickshire regiment, but he would have probably been asked to keep the kit, just change the uniform. He would have also been given a gas mask to protect him from gas attacks. Even though the uniform was what he needed, in some cases the uniform was not quite protective enough. For example, the helmet didn't do a very good job in protecting against shell fire and bullets, and the pocket + bousers itch, causing sores and pains. Below is a picture of the kit similar to what Ernest would have had. it

Did you research his sergeant's stripes or the badges of both regiments?

kit

The Typical British Soldier

Trench Warfare

The loss of life is one of the most memorable and tragic aspects of WWI. However, closer behind, the quality of life in trenches was very horrible. Trenches were dug about 4-6 feet deep to hide, protect and try to keep the soldiers safe during an attack. They were generally dug in zig-zag shapes to stop a bomb if it got into a trench, spreading throughout the whole trench, wiping out all of the soldiers. Both sides (Allies and axis) would have had a front line; where most of the attacking comes from, highly dangerous. Then behind would be support lines and camps. The land between both front lines is called no-man's-land. However, life in trenches was not as nice as most people hoped.

Men had to share their food, beds and lives with rats. The mud was disgusting and caused thousands of men to catch trench-foot; a devastating disease that affects the foot, leading to huge sores, ulcers and amputation. This wasn't helped when rain came. Dead bodies surrounded them, with the smell lingering over them constantly. It was very hard to sleep with the earbursting sound of machine-guns all the time. In all, trench life was disgusting, dirty, very dangerous and life changing. It is one of the most awful things about WWI.

Death Of Ernest Mitchell - 1916

Having served extremely well from 1914 at Mons, through several battles and tough conditions, Ernest passed away whilst fighting in the battle of Somme on the 9th July 1916, aged 33. He died from shell fire. The bravery, strength and courage of Mitchell, as well as every soldier, was outstanding. Whilst fighting in the war, he managed to be awarded a few medals. His name is on the memorial arch at Thiepval Memorial, France.

The picture I took of the memorial in France, with Ernest's name on it.

Thiepval
Memorial, Somme

His name is in the memorial book at St. Marys Church, Warwick.

War Diary of 11th. Battalion Royal Warwickshire Regiment

1916.

July.

9th
 (Contd)

day were 4 officers (2nd Lt Horton, 2nd Lt Jenkins, 2nd Lt Barnwell & 2nd Lt Alabaster) wounded 0.Rs. Killed 10 and about 86 wounded, mainly from shell fire.

Appendix.

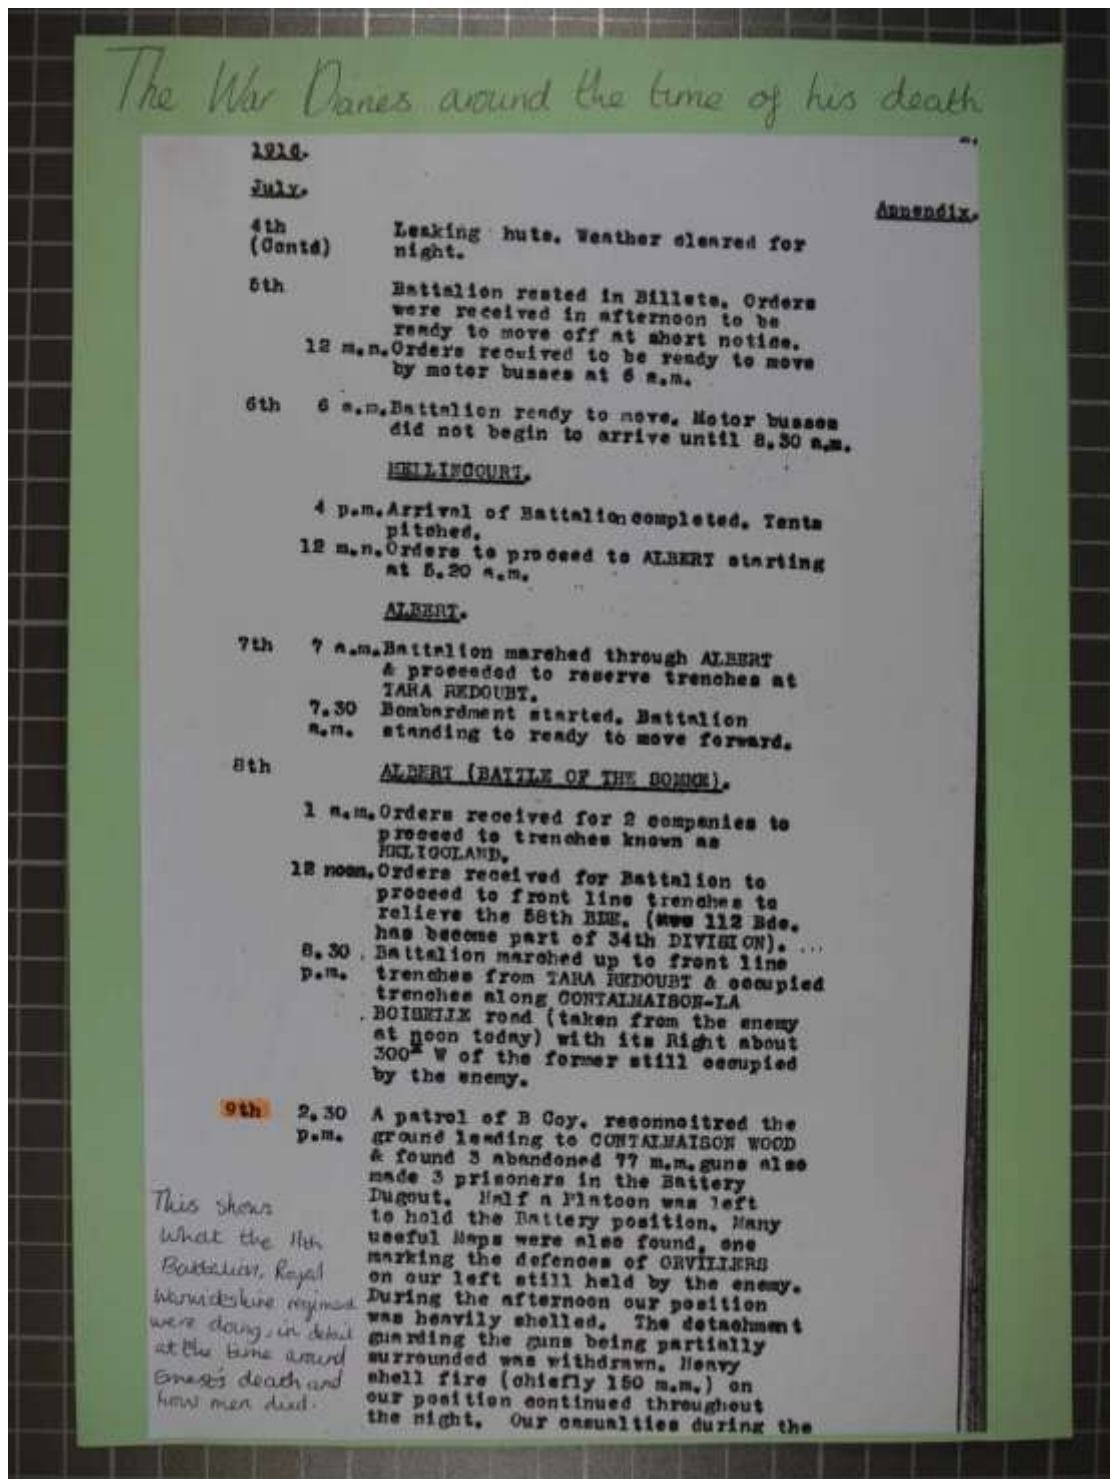

10th 1.30 Batt ordered to push strong patrols to certain points immediately W of CONTALMAISON with a view to the re-adjustment of our line. The 111 Bde on our left conforming. The operation was cancelled, as it was daylight before orders which had to be carefully considered were ready for issue to O.C.Coys. Our position was heavily shelled the whole day.

4.30 The 69th Bde assembled in our trenches & attacked CONTALMAISON from the W. The attack was preceded by an intense bombardment.

The village was successfully carried. G Coy proceeded to establish strong patrol posts on a line running S.W. of CONTALMAISON WOOD in conjunction with the 13th R. Bde (111th Bde) on our left. The 13th R. Bde was late, making it impossible for "G" Coy to make good its object owing to heavy Machine Gun & rifle fire from its front & left flank. Two officers & 50 O.Rs were sent from "A" Coy to assist in the consolidation. "G" Coy lost in officers 2nd Lt Kemsey-Bourne Killed, 2nd Lt Shewring & 2nd Lt Webb wounded. Capt Routh of "B" Coy was also wounded, while assisting in the operation as he knew the ground. The 13th R. Bde could not make their ground good & lost heavily in the attempt. During the latter's retirement to its original position, our "D" Coy on the left of our line repulsed enemy's forces, that followed the 13th R. Bde in their retirement, making one unwounded prisoner. The losses of the Batt throughout the day from heavy shell fire & the above action was considerable "D" Coy especially was very heavily shelled but remained steady throughout. 2nd Lt YOKINES was killed also 2nd Lt CRITCHLEY (Batt Bombing Officer) & O.S. Major CANTON. The losses for the day were 3 officers Killed 3 officers wounded 6 O.Rs Killed & 34 wounded & 6 missing.

11th 6
 A.M.

Relieved by the 10 L.N.Lance Regt & returned to TARA-USNA Ridge. During the night a very heavy artillery action about ...

Conclusion

I chose to research Sergeant Ernest Mitchell because he is my great great granddad. Furthermore, I was <sup>fascinated</sup> fascinated with finding out about him, where he served and what he accomplished. However, as this was such a big task, I had to use many websites to get information from. Here is my list of them:

The Long Long Trail ✓

CWGC website ✓

'The Mitchells Families' ✓

Google Maps ✓

Imperial War Museum ✓

BBc Bitesize ✓

National Archives ✓

Google Images ✓

BirminghamHistory.co.uk ✓

WW1 royalussex.co.uk ✓

I also got a lot of information from the War Diaries. I managed to get a copy of these because my Grandad had earlier applied for them. My Grandad also gave me a bit of background information about my soldier. I visited the library as well, to read through the books about WW1. I found the website 'Long Long Trail' very useful, because it has lots of facts about the battalions, regiments etc. It also had information about life in the trenches and maps. I think it is reliable because all the information is correct and it explains in detail. It is written by Chris Baker, a freelance military historian and founder of the Great War Forum. The difficulties with this project were finding out about the uniform and making sure I present it neatly. I overcame these by carrying on looking even if information wasn't easy to find. I would get there in the end. And I kept my project neat by focusing, spending time to do it properly and trying to be as clever as I could with layout. I found this project very enjoyable because I found out lots about my ancestor. I have learnt loads about WW1, including things like uniform, battles and reasons for the war. Overall, I have found this project hard work, but fun and beneficial. I am amazed with all that I found out about my soldier. It has been very useful for my research, presenting and history skills. I would happily do it again. 😊 That's nice to hear!

