HELP to cheer the boys on their way

On Miss Naffy's ready shoulders falls yet another task. When the boys come home on leave, no effort is spared to ease the burden of the journey. As the men speed homeward, Naafi girls on the leave trains serve tea and snacks in special buffet cars.

And when leave is over, soldiers and airmen again find Miss Naffy waiting to serve them, not only on the trains but in bright and cheerful canteens in the special transit camps where the men pause before returning overseas.

End-of-leave can be a grey and sombre period. Naafi has provided extra comforts and amenities to bring gaiety to the waiting hours. But their efforts will be useless without a small army of Naafi girls to provide an eager service, to cheer and encourage the boys going back and give them a parting memory of comfort and goodwill to sustain them in the days ahead.

If you are free to volunteer for this vital work, call (stating your preference for Naafi) at your local Employment Exchange. They will give you full details of this service.
