In Monday’s “Daily Express,” Mr. Shaw Desmond had a special article dealing with the treatment of British prisoners at Holzminden Camp, based on a secret diary kept by officer members of the Prisoners’ Committee. In the course of his article he says:

“The military authorities had made no arrangements to feed officers who were sick. Among these was Captain Godman, of the Royal Sussex Regiment (husband of Mrs. Godman, of Little Ote Hall, Wivelsfield). On 6th October a gunner brought him some tea at eight in the morning, and promised him some porridge after the muster. This was never brought, and the officer was locked up for the rest of the day, and was not even permitted to prepare any food that might be there. It was also made impossible for anyone to visit him, the guards threatening with loaded rifles any who attempted to approach. Captain Godman, ill as he was, was left foodless and alone the whole of the day. A cup of coffee was given to him in the evening, but no solid food was brought to him until 7th October. On 11th October he died.”
